On the Chief's arrival, the nearest nagistrate was sent for, and Callaghan and Esquirell were released at 2.30 clock Wednesday morning.
The arrest of the secret-service men was made on the complaint of August Coster, a cigar-dealer, at 303 Washington street, who pointed them out to he policeman as they were about to coard the ferry-boat after the counter-eiters.

in payment. Roster gave him so ceaus change, and he left. Soon after Callaghan entered, and asked to see the coin the man had paid for cigarettes. Callahan poured some liquid on the coin and said that, as he supposed, it was a counterfeit. He said he was after the counterfeiters. Callahan pocketed the coin and hurried away. Kaster saw him join Eaquirell, who he believed had given him the coin, and jumped to the conclusion that he was the victim of a "film-flam" same. Then he notified the police. The defense of the police is Kaster's story. They say that he is undoubtedly mistaken when he says that Esquirell passed the bad coin. It was undoubtedly one of the counterfeiters who bears a slight resemblance to the secret service officer.

John William Preyer, the famous painter of still life, was a remarkably small specimen of the genus homo, differing, however, from ordinary dwarfs in the symmetry and exact proportion of all the parts of his diminutive frame, says an exchange. When between twenty and thirty years of age his fresh, ruddy and beardless face, and the shrill and boyish tone of his voice, caused people to take him for a child of about eight at the most. This illusion was still further heightened by his dress—a short black velvet jacket with a large turn-down collar, over which his smoothly parted hair hung in thick clusters. When about this age Preyer paid a visit to Munich in order to inspect the art treasures in that city, and also to visit his old patron, "Master" Cornelius, a former President of the Dusseldorf Academy. When Preyer called at the house of the latter he had gone out, and the servant who had answered the door ran in to tell her mistress that a little boy was waiting outside to see the master. The lady went to speak to the visitor.

"What is it you want, my child?" she asked the painter, who, at the approach of the lady, took off his velvet cap and made a deep bow, saying in a shrill voice:
